East Carolina University has a very distinguished record of leadership and achievement in shared governance among its peer institutions. In 2015, we celebrated fifty years since the inception of ECU’s Faculty Senate. As part of that celebration we thanked colleagues for their selfless and noteworthy efforts on behalf of faculty and shared governance at East Carolina University. During the celebration, memorative medallions were awarded to nominated individuals and recipients were recognized for their efforts in serving the university, aiding faculty in their academic efforts, supporting shared governance and enabling higher education’s core principles to endure and evolve as an institutional priority.

50th Anniversary Medallion Recipients

The American Association of University Professors (AAUP) issued the first guidelines on shared governance in 1920, “emphasizing the importance of faculty involvement in personnel decisions, selection of administrators, preparation of the budget, and determination of educational policies.” East Carolina University’s Faculty Senate was the third senate created at an institution that is now part of the UNC system (we joined in 1971). ECU’s Faculty Senate, shared governance processes, and faculty leadership are well recognized at the system level. ECU’s faculty grievance processes were utilized as examples in the development of other campus’ grievance processes, and our promotion and tenure processes have influenced other campus’ development of their own.

The creation of a method for shared governance is considered critical to the function of a university, and the UNC Code, section 502D reads, in part, “The chancellor shall be responsible for ensuring that there exists in the institution a faculty council or senate, a majority of whose members are elected by and from the members of the faculty,” and “In addition to ensuring the establishment of a council or senate, the chancellor shall ensure the establishment of appropriate procedures within the institution to provide members of the faculty the means to give advice with respect to questions of academic policy and institutional governance, with particular emphasis upon matters of curriculum, degree requirements, instructional standards, and grading criteria.” We built this university together, and we will have to act together to preserve it and our right to shape ECU’s curriculum, our personnel processes, and our identity as the university committed to service and transforming eastern North Carolina. (Excerpts from Chair of the Faculty Andrew Morehead’s remarks to the Faculty Senate, March 2015)
The tradition of shared governance at East Carolina University can be traced back to a Tuesday, October 19, 1909 – two weeks after classes began, when then President Robert Wright convened the first recorded meeting of the faculty – all ten of them – seven women and three men. The Faculty Senate, ECU’s political structure, began in the fall of 1964 with a proposal that was later ratified by a meeting of the faculty as a whole in early 1965. During the 2014-2015 academic year, faculty participated in various 50th anniversary celebrations and were recognized for their ongoing volunteer efforts to maintain a strong shared governance structure at ECU. University Historian Professor John Tucker appeared at each Senate meeting to present key episodes in the history of shared governance. Provided below are links to the presentations.
