COMMUNITY-BASED RECOGNITION, EDUCATION, AND SERVICE

Recognition

- Recognized by MLK Memorial Committee in Manhattan, Kansas. My research on MLK streets acknowledged as seed for the dedication of a Manhattan street for King. Delivered talk as part of dedication ceremony in January 2007.
- Recognized by Georgia Clients Council, a statewide organization of low-income grassroots community-based leaders. My research on MLK streets acknowledged as partial impetus for organization's "Claiming a Street Named King Project," which seeks to learn about MLK thoroughfares and their conditions and formulate a process to revitalize impoverished communities, 2006-2007.
- My research article in Professional Geographer (2000) and interview on National Public Radio recognized as inspiration for study of Los Angeles' Martin Luther King, Jr. Boulevard. The project was conducted in an interdisciplinary, upper-division social science class at University Southern California taught by Katie Mills, who engaged students in community-based research, 2001.

Community Education Publication

- I produced and co-authored (with Patrick Pease and Matthew Mitchelson) the educational pamphlet "A Street Fit for a King: Remembering Martin Luther King, Jr. along America's Roadways." Over 10,000 copies of pamphlet distributed locally as well as to civil rights organizations and museums across the country, including MLK Historic Site in Atlanta, Georgia and the annual national meetings of the NAACP and SCLC, 2005-2007. Pamphlet funded by People's Geography Project and East Carolina University.
