The mission of the Center for Health Disparities Research (CHDR) is to reduce health disparities in eastern North Carolina. The CHDR focuses on disparities in obesity and in chronic disease (diabetes, cardiovascular disease and cancer) among African-Americans, Latinos, American Indians, and low-income and rural populations.

The mission of the North Carolina Agromedicine Institute (NCAI) is to reduce disparities in occupation-related injuries, fatalities and chronic disease in NC agricultural communities. The NCAI focuses on occupation-related health disparities among NC farmers, foresters, fishers, and their families. This joint lecture series reflects the missions of both groups.
