

Robin Tutor

Robin is a graduate of the class of 1979 and she also received her master's in public health in 2007 from ECU. She lives in Clayton, NC and she has one son. Her best class memory was the first day of gross anatomy when one of her classmates, Paula Lechner, turned different shades of green. Since graduating, Robin has had the privilege to serve children and families. She is currently working at NC Agro-medicine Institute/Southern Coastal Agro-medicine Center at ECU. She has also worked in in/outpatient rehabilitation, acute care-hospital, early intervention, school system, private practice-developmental disabilities for children and adults, ICF/MR, program development and compliance, and health/disability services coordinator-migrant head. Hone of the most exciting moment while out in the job field was the time when she had to go through a large mud puddle (half way the side of the car) to visit a small house (shack) in the middle of a trash pile to see premature infants. The house did not have indoor plumbing, was heated by a tin heater with no barrier to the children, and was reported by the social worker to have snakes. Another time she was met at the door by another mother of premature twins who locked her in immediately because someone a couple of doors down had been stabbed and the assailant had not been captured. Robin hopes to be able to retire to the farm with her son, daughter-in-law, and grandchildren. But, before doing this, she hopes to have an opportunity to do international health.
