

Occupational Therapy in Health Care

Occupational Therapy in Health Care is a journal of contemporary practice in occupational therapy. It provides occupational therapists and occupational therapy assistants with a forum to stay up-to-date on current methods and theories in the field. Focused on every day practice, the journal addresses the concerns of new and experienced practitioners, presenting innovations in client evaluations and interventions, current research findings, critical reviews of current textbooks, descriptions of novel programs, and descriptions of fieldwork innovations.

We are requesting manuscripts of high quality, but are not restricting them to pure research studies. Manuscripts that describe innovative program development or educational approaches, critical literature reviews, unique case, or thoughtful commentaries are encouraged.

Please contact Dr. Anne Dickerson, Editor, if you have any questions or need further information.

Internet Editor

This column is designed to be useful for practitioners in identifying useful Internet resources for each issue. Additionally, Dr. Griffiths will discuss the process of evaluating and ranking web resources, identifying useful health organization and comprehensive occupational therapy websites, and identify specific websites that match topics of the issues's manuscripts. If you have questions about the internet or want a web site reviewed, contact Dr. Griffiths for an upcoming issue.
