North Carolina requires an evaluation from an international education evaluation service, along with a copy of a current work authorization visa, a permanent resident card, or a US passport for individuals presenting foreign transcripts or credentials. The North Carolina Department of Public Instruction accepts evaluations from World Evaluation Services, Josef Silny & Associates, or International Education Evaluators, Inc. In order to be issued a North Carolina teaching license, an individual must be a US citizen or hold a valid US work visa.

Subsequently, the Office of Alternative Licensure at East Carolina University requires an evaluation and translation from one of the recognized international education evaluation services in order to formulate a plan of study.
