Educators to attend annual conference

Faculty and staff from East Carolina University’s College of Education are scheduled to attend the 2005 North Carolina Education Association annual conference today and Tuesday in New Bern.

This year’s conference theme is “Educational Enhancement for Lifetime Achievement: Preparing the Workforce to Meet the Challenges of the Changing Workplace.”

The conference’s goal is to inspire adult educators to share what programs, research and services they are using to serve adult students.

Peter Neean, director of the Employment Security Commission’s labor market information division, will speak on the state’s changing employment environment and the requirements workers will need.

The conference is “a valuable venue” for individual working in a myriad of adult education fields, said Vivian Mott, chairwoman of the college’s counselor and adult education program.
