EAST CAROLINA UNIVERSITY’S HISTORY OF STUDENT CENTERS

From East Carolina’s birth in 1907, the university’s engaged student body has called three different facilities home. Until 1923 students gathered, ate, and visited various support services in the Old Cafeteria Building, one of the campus’s six original buildings. Over the next 50 years the Wright Building, named after East Carolina University’s first president, Robert Herring Wright, served as student’s social, spiritual, and recreational home.

Dedicated on February 9, 1974, the Mendenhall Student Center became the university’s largest student facility. Named after Cynthia Anne Mendenhall, the first director of the Student Union (now the Student Activities Board), the 116,000 sq. ft. facility has become a destination point for numerous student centered activities, organizations, and gatherings as well as student services, recreation and program facilities, and various food services.
